

When do I use “der” and when do I use “den”?

Gender	Nominative Case Subjects & Predicate Nominatives			Accusative Case Direct Objects & Objects of Prepositional Phrases
	masculine	der	ein	er	den	einen	ihn
feminine	die	eine	sie	sie	die	eine	sie
neuter	das	ein	es	es	das	ein	es
plural	die	keine	sie	sie	die	keine	sie

der and ein and er

the a/an he/it

Use these if the noun (or pronoun) in questions is:

- a. either the SUBJECT
- b. or equals the SUBJECT and basically re-names it.

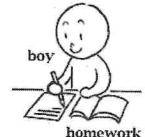

NOMINATIVE CASE

EXAMPLES:

Action Verb Sentence:

The boy is doing homework.
 A boy is doing homework.
 He is doing homework.

Der Junge macht Hausaufgaben.
 Ein Junge macht Hausaufgaben.
 Er macht Hausaufgaben.

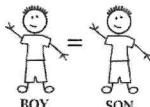

In this sentence, the boy is performing an action.

The boy is the SUBJECT and the homework is the DIRECT OBJECT receiving the boy's "is doing" action.

Linking Verb Sentence:

The boy is the son.
 A boy is a son.
 He is a he. (?—It's grammar.)

Der Junge ist der Sohn.
 Ein Junge ist ein Sohn.
 Er ist ein er.

In this sentence, the boy and the son are the same person.

The boy is the SUBJECT and the son is the PREDICATE NOMINATIVE that re-names him.

BTW—if the sentence were written in the reverse order (The son is the boy.), then the "son" would be the SUBJECT and the "boy" would be the PREDICATE NOMINATIVE. Whichever is first in a LINKING VERB sentence gets to be called the SUBJECT.

den and einen and ihn

a/an

him/it

Use these if the noun (or pronoun) in questions is:

- the DIRECT OBJECT of the sentence
- or is in a prepositional phrase of an accusative preposition

ACCUSATIVE CASE

EXAMPLES:

Action Verb Sentence:

The father loves the son.

A father loves a son.

He loves him.

Der Vater liebt den Sohn.

Ein Vater liebt einen Sohn.

Er liebt ihn.

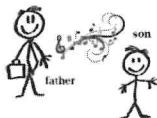

In this sentence, the father is performing an action. The father is the SUBJECT and the son is the DIRECT OBJECT receiving the father's love.

Prepositional Phrase Sentence (in the ACCUSATIVE CASE)

The father sings for the son.

A father sings for a son.

He sings for him.

Der Vater singt für den Sohn.

Ein Vater singt für einen Sohn.

Er singt für ihn.

HOW DO I KNOW?!

- Find the verb. Ask "Who is doing this verb?" → That's the SUBJECT.
- Then say: "What receiving the ACTION of the SUBJECT?" → That's the DIRECT OBJECT.
- But maybe you should have asked: "What else is the SUBJECT?" → That's the PREDICATE NOMINATIVE (or predicate adjective).
- Recognize accusative case prepositions: für, bis, & um. (There are a few more, too.)
